NORFOLE, July 30, 1888.

It is rumored that several foremen of the navy-yard are soen to be removed, especially those much given to the emplyment of Republicans in preference to Democrats when work is to be had. A praminent Democrat who has investigated the subject says there are fifty Republicans holding places in the navy-yard, some of whom (the colored messeners at $2 per day) have been there for twenty-dive years. Here of course you are not only invited out to dinner, but to dinners, and the oldtime Virginia hospitality is made manifest in the offer of a juiep of approved pattern tendered to all the guests, the preachers of course declaring. The dinner that follows is good, substantial, well prepared, and given without an attempt at display, and when it is finished you feel that your presence has put no one to trouble and you leave with an aident wish to repeat the same adventure at an early day. And, by the way, have you ever naused in the rush of business to consider the relative merits of a beefsteak here and in Richmond, or do you delight to dwell on the joys of life?
Think of it. A well-fatted buliock, eating blue grass under the dense shade of the sugartrees which dot the pasture-lands here and there, is shot down in the cool of the evening, neatly dressed, and receives the night temperature at an situade of 2,500 feet.
Don't draw on your imagination for a sweet and healthy steak the next morning. Jusshee it and it is there as an actual fact in all the matured glory of bullockhood. How is it in the city? The shipment on the crowded cars without food and water for twenty-four hours gives you bruised calle with fevered blood, and they are too frequently butcheved.

The laying of the corner atone of the new Mesonic Temple at Temperanceville last Wednesday was well attended and the exercises interesting and well rendered. The fair held by the ladies for the benefit of the Masonic Hall was liberally patronized. At night Professor Austin Merrill, of Vanderbill University, delighted a large audience with choice recitations.

Doughas Manual, a negro desperade, recently committed to Accomess jail for grand larceny, made his escape several nights ago with the sid of confederates who scaled the high wall surrounding the fail, broke the three heavy padlocks which fastened the iron doors leading to the cell where Manual was confined, and liberating the prisoner, made their escape to the woods. Manual is from Maryland, in which State be is said to have broken out of several jails. His confederates are also believed to be from Maryland.

Miss Amanda Hurst came to Onacock re-cently with her father and sister. While here the young lady disappeared, but subse-quent developments showed that she, in company with Arthur Mears, her youthful lover, boarded the steamer Tangier and left-for parts unknown.
